

Welcome Newsletter

Welcome to the Early Years Networks – a community of early years professionals committed to delivering high quality services to children and families. We understand the importance of intervening early in a child’s life to ensure that every child has the opportunities and experiences that will lay the foundations for life.

The National Education Trust was created in 2006. We harness our extensive national and international experience to bring about improvements for learners, from early years onwards. We assist education leaders and practitioners in sustaining success and tackling underperformance. We believe in:

- the primacy of proven best practice combined with innovation
- the power of collaborative, peer-to-peer working
- the need for an independent, non-profit perspective
- the importance of demanding but constructive challenge
- the effectiveness of listening to learners

Our work influences national policy and practice. We work with the Department for Education, several thousand school leaders and classroom practitioners across our aspire and inspire, national resource and independent services strands. The National Education Trust continues to bring people together, shares what works, provides sustainable improvement for education leaders, and ensures better outcomes for all learners.

Any professional working with young children from education, health or social care backgrounds can join our networks. We share expertise and promote creative and innovative practice through dialogue, exchange visits and training together. As an independent charity we work hard to keep costs to a minimum so that all our events are accessible to all.

“I’ve gone from overwhelming concern over the challenges I face to celebrating success, feeling good and energised to do more.” London Early Years NETworks 2011

Through the Early Years Networks Project we will help you to face the many changes and the challenges and will inspire you to become strong advocates for children and families in your own communities. I look forward to meeting you at a NETworks event soon!
